

MAKAPALA BY THE SEA.

XXIV.—BOATS THAT PASS AND RE-PASS IN THE NIGHT AND IN THE DAY.

By ANNE MARIE PRESCOTT.

I.

Salute that native's boat;
Salute, salute we say!
Salute the native's oar
That brings us safe to shore;
Salute, salute we say.

But, as for poor little Makapala there is never a sign—divil a bit, of the plantation on the face of it, just toilers abide within its gates, hewers of wood and drawers of water indeed, Chinese and natives. There is, however, the same Pacific in front of it, the same glorious sky, of all Hawaii nei, over it; the same delightful atmosphere surrounds it; the same one God and Saviour Jesus is preached into its ears.

This little village is not rich as many a more wealthy one; but it is rich in its own way. But if you go to the upland you can look south and west on plantations of richest hue. Wheat! How rich! And if you will gaze "away down east," there is little Nihi close on to the sea, busy as a bee, all about one thing—sugar cane. On that one theme this whole district, excepting the little Makapala, is busy.

Yes, Makapala, 12 miles off is the leading port of North Kohala and this district is the most northerly of the whole six and the richest, and the most important and the smallest in this island of Hawaii. It's a mighty pretty, green bit of earth and cool as a cucumber, its lettuce and radishes are crisp, its lentils are tender, cabbages heady, sweet potatoes and taro and onions, pineapples, figs, strawberries, oranges, eggs, milk, fresh butter—all there—"Who'll bid? Going, going, gentlemen! Gone."

Where is coffee? You've lost your bearings. Not on this side of Hawaii. But let me tell you here, now you ask; coffee is jealous of cane, rice is getting jealous of coffee. Weiluku is jealous of Hilo, Hilo is intensely jealous of Honolulu, Kauai says, "if it is not as big as Maui it's enough sight more beautiful," and so this little island—world wags on and on to the end of the chapter. "By my troth, Nerina, my little body is weary of this great world." It is very natural of course, that we should, nearly all of us, fall into the error that almost the entire population of the globe rise in the morning and climbing the highest point handy, shade their eyes, looking seaward toward Hawaii. But, this is so-phistry.

Someone has said that "a thing is never too often repeated that is not well-learned." And it does, to us, seem strange, now, that all intelligent, educated people, everywhere, are not perfectly conversant with the affairs of the Islands, from a political, physical and every other standpoint. But it is not at all so. The steam-boat companies, you say, have been sowing the seed now for years, broadcast. Have they? How many copies all told? A teacher insists on accuracy—facts not fancies. There are as you know some sixty-three million at home—my home. They do not all live in San Francisco, New York or Washington. In those three cities the population, to a certain extent, know of the Sandwich Islands. Yes, we admit that point.

There are, literally, millions of intelligent beings in the United States who have no more exact knowledge of Hawaii for instance, than they know about Japan in England, or about the Sandwich Islands, or about the Hawaiian Islands. Millions more be it said, who care to know no more about it. They are interested in the little world about them and wish to be left entirely alone. Why, it is a literal fact, not a needless of yarn or worsted, that the writer had to stay in a village in New Hampshire, off the railroad some distance, over a Sunday; and the villagers had heard incidentally, that there was a town in Massachusetts by the name of—!
